Personal history

Little is known about Ragden Greybane before she entered the public eye. Most believe that she came from nothing. Just an average dwarf. However, her legacy lives on as potentially the greatest mason Dwarves have ever seen. During the gods war, The Dwarven Empire was dealing with incursions of fiendish creatures on all fronts. It was a bloody conflict which saw the deaths of many dwarves and other races. As the war began to near its end (though none knew when that end would come) the Emperor of Kurleigh decided that he wanted more protection for his glorious city and commissioned a great gate to be built. With many of its people out fighting in the war, it fell on a simple dwarf mason who was relatively unknown at the time. This dwarf was Ragden Greybane. Over several years she worked tirelessly to create the Emperors gate. It was, as designed, hundreds of segments of overlapping stone and metal which sat at the cavernous mouth of Kurleigh. If the need arose, the segments could be released and the gate would cascade down, sealing city.

It was a monumental creation. The Emperor was pleased and granted Greybane a noble title, hiring her on as his personal family's mason. Greybane went on to refurbish several of the upper levels of Kurleigh, as well as personally designing several lower levels before the world shattered.
