Personal history

Sibilla was born only just before the Accords of Manoa and does not have any proper memories from before that peace. Her parents were both members of the Children of the Prophet and so she grew up in one of their monasteries. When she was very young, only just starting her apprenticeship as a tailor, she had an unfortunate accident falling down a set of stairs which permanently disfigured her hips. Resolute to not let that stop her from living her life she worked twice as hard at her apprenticeship finishing her time there intent on working her way to the position of High Priest and, eventually, Archbishop.

Her time as a Priest was mostly spent within Harwood Citadel . She participated in ceremonies and blessings. She learned divine magic and cemented herself as a cornerstone of the Children of the Prophet. She was named spiritual leader of the Temple of the Prophet in Harwood Citadel a year before

The Seraph 's appearance and for this reason was one of the few present to lay eyes on the Seraph and hear her voice. Her presence at that event made her part of the elite group and fast tracked her way to the position of High Priest. Three short years later the Archbishop at the time named her his successor. Sibilla doubled her efforts to spread the word of the Seraph as Archbishop Inheritor.

In the year 821 the Archbishop passed away and Sibilla was bestowed the title in a very public ceremony. Since then she has made it her goal to put a shrine to the Seraph in every city, town, and backwater hamlet in Ovenica. She has especially been struggling with Gravewood province due to the Calder Family and the Order of the Silver Mind refusing to allow her religious ideologies to permanently settle on their land.
Sibilla died in the years following the deaths of Lord Idris Daemon and Gulrig Clanless. The revelation about the Seraph and the Prophet sent her into a deep depression for the last years of her life. She became cloistered and rarely spoke to anyone outside of close friends. When she passed in 850 AGW, she left no successor, and there has been no one in the position of Archbishop since.
